

China Seed Market To Hit $3.9 Billion!

Shandong Zhouyuan Seed and Nursery Co., Ltd (SZSN)

$0.28 UP 16.6%

China is the second largest seed market in the world. China's current market is $2.9 Billion annually and experts forecast it to hit $3.9 Billion in the next 2.5 years. SZSN is already expanding to keep ahead of the demand. Read the news, and watch for more Monday. Get on SZSN!

For example, what happens when a California resident seeks redress against an e-commerce company based in Canada?

Solove of the George Washington University Law School.

Regardless of the legalities surrounding activities ranging from outright movie bootlegging to the posting of small clips on YouTube, there is a debate over whether piracy helps or hurts sales.

The reality is probably that it's a matter of degree.

It won't happen overnight.

For more detail take a look at Howard Knopf's comment in his Excess Copyright blog.

For example, training may be cut short, not enough attention might be paid to managing the project, and response times for service might be slow.

He talks about the privacy implications of that.

It may however be a breach of express written confidentiality provisions within the distribution chain, depending on how it was leaked.

Examples include solicitor-client privilege and doctor-patient confidentiality.

It means we need to recognize privacy issues when doing our jobs and understand how to deal with them, or who to turn to for guidance.

Under the "order and fairness" principle, Lax decided it was reasonable that the action was tried in New York because Click had control over a website that was available there.

This is especially true for anything requiring ongoing work.

Ignoring legal actions launched in other countries is dangerous.

Essentially, it is about the integration of data across different platforms and from different sources.

That makes it hard to determine what the law really is on the subject.

You may end up doing things the vendor perhaps should have done.

CNet has a good article entitled Hollywood hates pirates, but can it use them?

The McLean Report is only available by paid subscription, but the article is reproduced here with their permission.

The dispute between BMW and Nissan arose over the letter M and its design.

The basis was copyright in the packaging.

Many improper releases of personal information seem to be caused by human error or by not thinking about privacy consequences.

It essentially becomes difficult to motivate the vendor, which will want to do only the minimum necessary.

In other words, they asked the telcos for the information by pretending they were the account owner.

There is no central database of fingerprint data.

In the Disney case, Lax found a real and substantial connection to the New York jurisdiction since Click's website was available in the United States and had specifically targeted U.

Michael points out though the puzzling position of CRIA that this successful arrest means our laws need to be tougher.

Solove of the George Washington University Law School.

He also talks about his support for net neutrality, including a good example of its meaning.

Rather, he considered the process as the buyer of a luxury, high-performance vehicle.

For example, training may be cut short, not enough attention might be paid to managing the project, and response times for service might be slow.

In the Disney case, Lax found a real and substantial connection to the New York jurisdiction since Click's website was available in the United States and had specifically targeted U.

For example, what happens when a California resident seeks redress against an e-commerce company based in Canada?

That's clearly not a correct copyright principle.

Essentially, it is about the integration of data across different platforms and from different sources.

Pay now to secure customer data, or be prepared to pay much more later on.

The McLean Report is only available by paid subscription, but the article is reproduced here with their permission.

However, preliminary results of our inquiries revealed that the Office lacked jurisdiction to continue the investigation.

The basis was copyright in the packaging.

He also will be more likely to provide the bare minimum services required by the deal and strictly construe its obligations in the agreement.

It is a worthwhile read for anyone wanting to understand where things might be headed.

ca has an article entitled HR departments use biometrics to account for employee attendance that talks about a business that uses employee fingerprints to track their working hours.

Essentially, it is about the integration of data across different platforms and from different sources.

In effect, to have a foreign judgment enforced in Canada, there must be no procedural unfairness and the judgment cannot offend Canadian concepts of justice and morality.

Is the Canadian company subject to legal action by that resident in California or must the California resident seek redress in Canada under Canadian laws?

How do we create this culture of privacy?

Think of it as convergence of data.

I question though whether upgrading a current computer from XP to Vista is worth it by the time you invest in the cost of Vista, hardware upgrades and time.

I subscribe to the view that a certain amount of "leakage" helps boost movie revenue, but the movie industry doesn't always see it that way.

The bottom line is that a Canadian website that targets users in another country may be subject to that country's laws and legal system.

A New York court had found Click liable for providing online customers with technology required to download Disney's copyrighted films.

A large factor in the decision was the perspective the judge took in assessing the likelihood of a "mistaken inference."

For example, what happens when a California resident seeks redress against an e-commerce company based in Canada?

It means we need to recognize privacy issues when doing our jobs and understand how to deal with them, or who to turn to for guidance.

In other words, they asked the telcos for the information by pretending they were the account owner.

When negotiating an agreement for the purchase of goods or services, some buyers try to get the vendor down to the lowest possible price.

That makes it hard to determine what the law really is on the subject.

The court decided against Kraft.

See David Fraser's Canadian Privacy Law Blog for the text of the press release, and links.

The lesson is to protect the personal information of customers, and in turn good will and the company brand.

In my view clips or mash-ups posted on YouTube is beneficial for sales.

That's the right way to do it - the best way to avoid data leaks and unintended use of data is to never have it in the first place.

Click knew legal proceedings were being brought against it but ignored them, claiming it lacked the financial resources to defend itself in New York.

It won't happen overnight.

It is not uncommon for people to recognize when their own privacy has been violated, but not when they are violating the privacy of others or putting their own privacy at risk.

He may not be attentive to project details or buyer needs.

This is a good thing.

He also talks about his support for net neutrality, including a good example of its meaning.

Lax addressed possible defences to having a foreign judgment enforced against a party in Canada.

Some are trained in confidentiality leading to ingrained daily practice.

It connected with my home network quickly and easily - printing from a printer attached to another computer was a breeze.

The first is a paper called 'I've Got Nothing to Hide' and Other Misunderstandings of Privacy by Professor Daniel J.

That may not be the best approach, however, because it can affect the quality of services you receive and may end up costing more.

Many improper releases of personal information seem to be caused by human error or by not thinking about privacy consequences.

You may end up doing things the vendor perhaps should have done.

We also need to understand the privacy consequences of things we do every day, such as placing information on social networks such as Facebook.

That makes it hard to determine what the law really is on the subject.

Think of it as convergence of data.

In effect, to have a foreign judgment enforced in Canada, there must be no procedural unfairness and the judgment cannot offend Canadian concepts of justice and morality.

Under the "real and substantial connection" test, Lax summarized the key factors for determining the proper jurisdiction for bringing a legal action.

Sometimes the saying "you get what you pay for" is true.

In other words, trade-marks can be more alike for luxury cars than for breakfast cereal.

Under the "real and substantial connection" test, Lax summarized the key factors for determining the proper jurisdiction for bringing a legal action.

The dispute between BMW and Nissan arose over the letter M and its design.

That concept is important for reasons of accuracy, accountability, and intended use.

However, preliminary results of our inquiries revealed that the Office lacked jurisdiction to continue the investigation.

The bottom line is that a Canadian website that targets users in another country may be subject to that country's laws and legal system.

In other words, trade-marks can be more alike for luxury cars than for breakfast cereal.

Two auto giants recently sparred in court over several trade-marks.

In my view clips or mash-ups posted on YouTube is beneficial for sales.

Click knew legal proceedings were being brought against it but ignored them, claiming it lacked the financial resources to defend itself in New York.

He was involved in the case.

Two auto giants recently sparred in court over several trade-marks.

Frankly, I wish we had a similar approach here in Canada.

So in my view - if one is buying a new computer - the only reason not to get Vista is if there is still some compatibility problem with some corporate software you have.

In the end, Lax saw no reason to deny Disney the judgment it obtained against Click in the U.

It connected with my home network quickly and easily - printing from a printer attached to another computer was a breeze.

Nissan uses the M for a line of cars under its Infiniti luxury line.

Michael points out some of the issues this raises.

The fingerprint data on the cards is not usable to reverse engineer the fingerprint, and is not compatible with the methods used by law enforcement.

Click knew legal proceedings were being brought against it but ignored them, claiming it lacked the financial resources to defend itself in New York.

The interesting part for me was how the system was designed with privacy in mind from the outset.

Nissan uses the M for a line of cars under its Infiniti luxury line.

The fingerprint data on the cards is not usable to reverse engineer the fingerprint, and is not compatible with the methods used by law enforcement.

He was involved in the case.

My first thought when I saw the article was amazement that people continue to fall for these.

The article has some practical tips on how to protect data, and is a worthwhile read.

There is no central database of fingerprint data.

It means we need to recognize privacy issues when doing our jobs and understand how to deal with them, or who to turn to for guidance.

Two auto giants recently sparred in court over several trade-marks.

The lesson is to protect the personal information of customers, and in turn good will and the company brand.

We also need to understand the privacy consequences of things we do every day, such as placing information on social networks such as Facebook.

How do we create this culture of privacy?

The implementation may take longer and have more frustrations than it should.

The article has some practical tips on how to protect data, and is a worthwhile read.

These criteria were met in the Disney case because Click was well aware of the legal proceedings and chose to do nothing to defend itself.

When negotiating an agreement for the purchase of goods or services, some buyers try to get the vendor down to the lowest possible price.

Kraft had the exclusive right to sell Toblerone bars in Canada.

For example, what happens when a California resident seeks redress against an e-commerce company based in Canada?

Thus BMW was not successful in stopping Nissan from using any of the "M" marks.

That may not be the best approach, however, because it can affect the quality of services you receive and may end up costing more.

Howard Knopf has a slightly different twist on the IP infringement side of things in his Excess Copyright blog that's worth a read.

Examples include solicitor-client privilege and doctor-patient confidentiality.

Some are trained in confidentiality leading to ingrained daily practice.

It is not uncommon for people to recognize when their own privacy has been violated, but not when they are violating the privacy of others or putting their own privacy at risk.

The article has some practical tips on how to protect data, and is a worthwhile read.

They sued to stop another party from importing them from Europe.

That's despite a Federal Court ruling a while back that the Copyright Act did not intend for the levy to be on digital audio recorders.

" He did not take the perspective of a casual consumer somewhat in a hurry.

It essentially becomes difficult to motivate the vendor, which will want to do only the minimum necessary.

Lax addressed possible defences to having a foreign judgment enforced against a party in Canada.

Ignoring legal actions launched in other countries is dangerous.

Designing privacy into technology and processes is a common theme of Privacy Commissioners and privacy advocates.

They sued to stop another party from importing them from Europe.